into layout drift, unexpected scrollbars, and inconsistent typography. In environments where mobile-first breakpoints dominate, a single column mistake often forces developers to inject media queries that mask the root cause rather than solve it. The result is heavier CSS bundles and a fragmented user experience across devices. Bad habit: `grid-template-columns: 300px 200px 300px;` locks columns to static sizes, causing overflow on narrow viewports. Better alternative: `grid-template-columns: repeat(3, 1fr);` lets each track share the available space, automatically adapting to any screen width.
