touchstones that the target audience already knows, making the deception feel authentic rather than fabricated. Choose the right sender profile. Use a name or number that the recipient recognises—an old friend, a service brand, or a familiar account. Mimic platform quirks. Replicate the exact font, timestamp format, and notification sound of the messaging app being spoofed. Anchor the text in reality. Reference current events, popular shows, or shared experiences (for example, a surprise “Pride & Prejudice” book club invitation that feels timely). Keep the message concise. Long paragraphs raise suspicion; a short, punchy line is more likely to be accepted and forwarded.
