of each team can improve your bracket's chances. Consider factors such as team defense, offense, recent performance, and head-to-head matchups. Don't rely solely on the top-seeded teams, as Cinderella stories often occur in the NCAA tournament. Many bracket enthusiasts fall into the trap of choosing teams solely based on name recognition or media expectations. Avoid relying on hype-driven picks and instead focus on team performance, statistics, and recent trends. Be cautious of 'lock' games, where top-seeded teams are often expected to win, and take into account factors like fatigue, injuries, and mental states. Roll with the underdogs: Look for teams that are often overlooked, such as those with a strong defense or a recent win streak. Watch for fatigue: Teams often underperform after long road trips or grueling match-ups. There's more than one way to pick an It's that time of the year again! More on whas11.com
