Choosing between August and September is your first major calendar decision. August typically offers longer daylight hours and warmer sea breezes, but it's also school holiday season, meaning busier paths. September often brings more stable weather, fewer people, and the beginning of autumnal colors across the chalk hills. Your calendar should note that while September days shorten, the cooler temperatures can make the strenuous 14-mile undulating path more comfortable for experienced walkers. Mark key dates like. A solid calendar works backwards from your target date. Four to six weeks out, secure any necessary accommodation in nearby Seaford or Eastbourne, as these towns fill up. Two weeks prior, confirm public transport schedules for the bus links between the walk's start and end points. The week before, daily checks of the Met Office forecast for the South Downs National Park become crucial—this isn't a walk to attempt in heavy rain or strong winds. On your calendar, also note to pack layers;
