penalties ranging from $2,200 per day to potential civil investigations. In an era where plan participants demand transparency, a flawless 5500 not only avoids fines but also strengthens fiduciary credibility. Missing Schedule I data. Sponsors often overlook the Schedule I “Financial Information” field, leading to mismatched asset totals. Cross-checking your investment ledger before submission eliminates this pitfall. Incorrect plan year dates. A mis-typed plan year can trigger automatic rejections. Use a calendar-validated template that locks the start and end dates. Overlooking amendments. Changes to plan documents after the filing deadline must be reported on Schedule C. Maintaining a version-control log simplifies amendment capture. Build a single repository—ideally a cloud-based database—containing payroll, contributions, and investment balances. When the filing window opens, pull directly from this hub rather than reconciling multiple spreadsheets.
