master calendar, individual course outlines, and department memos. This fragmentation forces educators to juggle multiple sources, increasing the risk of missed deadlines and misaligned priorities. The Academic Calendar Umbrella consolidates these disparate elements into a single, color-coded interface. Each color represents a category—exams, assignments, faculty meetings, or student services—allowing stakeholders to glance at the entire semester and instantly discern critical tasks. In practice, a professor who once spent an hour daily cross-referencing documents now spends minutes reviewing a unified dashboard. The time saved translates into deeper student engagement or more thorough lesson preparation.
