Original Medicare + Medigap “ Provides nationwide coverage and freedom to choose any in-network provider, but premiums vary widely. In a series of protests that drew dozens of older citizens to state capitols across Connecticut, retirees are raising alarms about the rising costs and shrinking benefits of Medicare Advantage plans. While the headline “The Advantage Credit Advantage “ How to Save Big” hints at financial strategies, the current debate centers on whether the convenience of Medicare Advantage truly delivers savings—or whether traditional Medicare or alternative private plans might better protect seniors’ budgets. What drives retirees to pick up signs and march? The answer is a combination of rising premiums, limited drug coverage, and a perception that plans are shifting more costs onto beneficiaries. In a recent press release, a coalition of senior advocacy groups cited a 12% increase in premiums over the past three years, coupled with a 9% rise in out-of-pocket costs for prescription drugs. For many, these changes erode the very savings that Medicare Advantage was supposed to deliver. How do Medicare Advantage plans stack up against traditional Medicare and other private options? The answer hinges on individual circumstances. In general, Medicare Advantage plans often cap out-of-pocket expenses, which can provide protection against catastrophic costs. However, caps frequently come with strict provider networks and limited formulary coverage. For retirees who travel frequently or rely on specialty drugs, these restrictions can erode net savings. Consider a typical retiree who spends $8,000 annually on prescription drugs. If a Medicare Advantage plan offers a $1,500 out-of-pocket maximum but excludes a high-cost medication, the retiree may still face a $6,500 drug bill, surpassing the cap and nullifying the intended savings. When the balance of cost versus benefit tilts against Medicare Advantage, two main alternatives emerge: Original Medicare plus a Medigap policy, or a private supplemental plan that offers more flexibility with provider choice. Here's a quick comparison:
